Excerpt: . . . 5 Using the logit function, and fitting a linear predictor composed of a p-dimensional vector of independent variables (  $X_1, X_2, \dots, X_p$  ), leads to the 1 2 p familiar logistic regression model where the conditional probability of salmonid incidence is given as The independent variables used in the analyses consisted of spatial factors ( latitude and longitude ), month, time period, and sea surface temperature. Model parameters  $\beta$  of the linear predictor were estimated by the method of maximum likelihood. Model selection employed a stepwise regression algorithm. Design variables for categorical variables were constructed using reference cell coding, where the lowest group of a categorical variable serves as a referent group ( Table 3 ). Model significance was assessed by likelihood ratio statistics which are formed from the logarithm of the ratio of two likelihoods ( hereafter called the deviance ). For a particular step, the deviance provides a test for whether the term entered ( or removed ) at that step significantly improves model prediction. Model adequacy was assessed by the Hosmer goodness-of-fit test ( Hosmer and Lemeshow 1989 ), which compares the observed and predicted frequencies within strata defined by a grouping of the estimated probabilities. Results Only 57 of the 1,402 ( i. e. , 4.07% ) observed operations encountered salmonids, of resulting in a total observed catch 79 salmonids during the 1989 monitoring program. As a...
