From there we went on the road leading to Widow Glenn's house, which we passed over before daylight of the 20th, and near this house we remained until 12 M. on that day; the house is still here, but uninhabited. Captains Ingersoll and Burroughs, Lieutenants Van Winkle and Bailey, Chaplain Jaquess, and several enlisted men joined our squad, and from there we took the road which went along to the field of battle, recognizing our old path; found the grounds on which we had halted before going into the charge; followed down the way we had gone. Here and there we found graves in the field, but without anything to show who had fallen...
