Excerpt: . . . to keep our own native warblers pent up within iron bars, and that it is positive cruelty to the lark, which sings as he mounts upwards, and in endeavouring to obey this law of his nature, beats himself against the top of his cage, in vain attempts to ascend. Why should we remove birds far from their native haunts into the busy city, and there keep them prisoners, especially now we have such facilities for going forth into the open country, where the lark still warbles flying, or to the woods where we may hear the sound of music sweet, from birds among the bowers, telling of joy and liberty, and always suggestive of praise to the great and good Creator, who has made birds as well as man to enjoy his blessed gift of freedom But we can scarcely regret that the canary should be at home with us, for he has completely become a household bird, born and brought up in our houses, nursed in the midst of plenty and indulgence, with no care to provide his own living, and exempt from the ups and downs of life, through which so many of our own real British songsters have to pass; but all this is necessary, that we may have the enjoyment of hearing the delightful voice of the delicate little foreigner. Let us continue our kindness, and long enjoy the melody of the canary nightingale. FAVOURITE WINDOW PLANTS. --Third Article. The attentive...
