Excerpt: . . . with my special thunder directed toward those who would prevent woman from seeking to heal the sick world that leans on her. This was Luciles influence, combined with reading Eminent Women of the Age, plus a little Huxley and Spencer. The hodge-podge wound up with a poetical passage probably inspired by parts of Paradise Lost, and by a poem of Emma C. Emburys-- The Mother. Concerning the ending, I was not aware of its being anything but smooth in expression till, on reading it aloud to one of the girls, she exclaimed, Why, Eugenie, that isnt prose--that is poetry! a verdict which naturally made me feel more keenly than ever the disappointment at not being able to read my masterpiece at Commencement. After graduation I pieced out a summer term in a district school, the regular teacher falling ill. As it was in one of...
